olify our instinct for practicality, they are a perfect reflection of our national timidity in government. We have the nost thoroughly decentralized government the world has ever seen. In recent years we have come to see that the dissipation of individual responsibility, inherent in our system, is most to blame for our governmental inefficiency, and we are moving rapidly in our great revolutionary work of reconstructing the machinery of government so that responsibility will become the powerful factor which it must be in any successful scheme of human affairs. We are first simplifying our municipal government so that responsibility will flow in direct lines from the people's servants to the people.

"The movement is beginning to extend to state governments and it appears that soon we will have real politics in this country in place of the degrading hustle for office which has been heretofore the minspring of public action.

"We are beginning to see that the trouble with our courts is almost identical with the trouble experienced in mynicipal.

"The complaint is not so much that judges do not know the law or do not conscientiously apply it. The complaint is largely as to failure on the administrative side of the judicial function.

Judges Are Unorganized.

"If all the numerous judges, in some states several hundred in number, are to do their individual piecework so tha there will be real effectiveness in the output of the entire force, there must be a entralized intelligence to direct their ef forts, and this intelligence must have power to enforce its will. There must be finally one single person held responsible for the execution of the centralized will of the indicial department.

for the execution of the centralized will of the judicial department and for harmonious work. That single responsible person must be accountable directly to all the people of the state.

"Lacking any administrative machinery in our judicial system, we have been obliged to legislate a great volume of mandatory and inflexible rules in an effort to force judges to do the right thing. As a matter of fact judges almost always want to do the right thing, but are constantly confronted by this inflexible procedure which compels them to do rocedure which compels them to do stantly confronted by this inflexible procedure which compels them to do awkward and uneconomical things.

"It is now quite generally agreed that beyond a short practice act, all rules of procedure should be rules of court which will permit of variance in the interest of substantial justice. Lawyers talk this doctrine in two score bar associations, but there is no step toward putting it into effect, and the reason is that the judicial system is so flabby that there is really no place where this important power can be safely vested.

"But no great change is needed. There need be no such sweeping change as takes place when a city adopts commission government. It is merely necessary to create a unified organization of the courts of a state, making very little change in the accustomed courts. There will still be judges devoted to the trial of all sorts of causes and a court for appeal, and local judges of limited jurisdiction. The central authority which must be transferred largely from tion. The central authority which must exist to exercise the rule-making power, which must be transferred largely from the legislature to the judiciary, can be brought into being by providing a judicial council of five or seven or nine judges. The head of the council will be the chief justice of the state. These men may spend most of their time on the bench, but as a judicial council they will have important administrative powers, will become, in fact, responsible for the enforcement of departmental rules and for the economical and prompt functioning, of ical and prompt functioning, o

Efficient Court Management.

"The larger questions involved will b settled by the judicial council, whose or ders will be executed by the chief justice. The lesser details, arising from day to day, will come directly within the provto day, will come directly within the province of the chief justice. To keep him in touch with the system, he must become the recipient of frequent reports from all the judges and branch courts and must compile and digest these reports and publish them so that the people will know what is going on in the judicial department. They do not now know, and have no means of knowing. As a matter of fact, nobody knows, Ours is the only government in the world in which judicial statistics are lacking.

"Of course procedural rules so made will be subject to the veto of the legislature, but experience in England and organized courts exercise this power so well that the legislature is not tempted to interfere.

"The American Judicature Society.

well that the legislature is not tempted to interfere.

"The American Judicature Society, called into being expressly to study the needs of courts and procedure and to further a movement calculated to make our judicial systems expressive of the democratic idea, finds its present scope for activity largely in this insistent need for proper organization. It is a work more of political science than of law. The political scientists have been too shy to invade this field. The lawyers have not appreciated the non-technical character of this constructive work. The field has been unoccupied until now.

"The American Judicature Society, which has enrolled lawyers in practically every state to form an advisory and critical body, conceives of the present need as calling especially for concrete recommendations in the form of model acts. The field divides readily into municipal and state courts.

Model Act Is Drafted.

Model Act Is Drafted.

"The first draft of a model act to create we're disappointed when we hear model acts will be supplemented by schedules of rules constituting simple and rational procedure, and suitable for enactment as a substitute for the great body of procedural law which has accumulated. The courts will then be given power "In all these suggestions there is no procedure to meet needs as they arise. "In all these suggestions thre is no proposal to alter any substantive law or to affect any substantive right of any party litigant. The idea is merely to unify courts into a simple department so that the plain duty of adjudicating controversies may be performed with a minimum of effort and inconvenience; to give somebody power to get good results on mum of effort and inconvenience; to give somebody power to get good results on the administrative side of the judicial function: to hold those persons to whom such power is given strictly accountable for results; to let a flood of daylight into our court business, and to acquire from the courts the data upon which constructive social and criminal legislation can be founded."

Department of Commerce Gives Operation for First Nine Months.

FOREIGN COMMERCE ONLY EXCEEDED ONCE BEFORE

Declares Record Compares Favorably With Similar Measures Enacted in Last Twenty-Five Years.

The Department of Commerce today made public a statement showing the operations of the new tariff law for the first nine months of its existence as they have affected foreign commerce. According to the statement, the United States has had in that period a foreign erce of $3,243,566,840, which is, with ne exception, the largest total ever only 2.17 per cent below the high record 1912-13.

The statement is as follows:
"Imports, according to the official figures of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, Department of Commerce, in the nine months ended with June last amounted to $1,446,127,491, against $1,-394,765,233 in the corresponding period one year ago, and $1,294,093,701 in the like period two years ago.
"Free merchandise imported during the first nine months of the present tariff law aggregated $93,002,100, forming 61.9 per cent of the total imports, compared with 54.9 per cent in the corresponding period a year earlier. 1912-13.

High Record Imports.

"The high-record imports noted above resulted chiefly from a marked increase in foodstuffs, amounting to $73,000,000 in the first nine months of the new tariff period, and smaller increases in manu-factures and raw materials. Partially Miss Lavinta Dock, secretary Internacompleted manufactures imported fell off tional Council of Nurses, New York city; about 14 per cent.

"Exports during the nine months under "Exports during the nine months under review totaled $1,797,459,349, with one exception the largest October-June total ever shown, being 7.8 per cent below the high record made in the nine months ended June 30, 1913, and 3.5 per cent above the best record made in the corresponding period of any earlier year. The failing off in exports, which had been somewhat pronounced in the period from November to May last, seems to have about culminated, since the figures for June were only $6,285,465 below June of last year, and were considerably more than those of any prior June in the history of the export trade.

"The decrease in exports was chiefly in foodstuffs, a reflection of the shortage in the domestic supply, which also manifested itself in larger importations of that class. Foreign requirements of American products for manufacturing purposes were slightly less than in the same period a year ago, a falling off of $30,000,000 being noted in the exports of partially manufactured materials, and an increase of $32,000,000 in the exports of raw materials. Finished manufactures exported in the nine months decreased $51,000,000, as compared with a decrease of $99,000,000 in foodstuffs.
